FOUR PERSIANS ARE REFUSED ADMITTANCE

Are First Foreigners Other Than Mexicans to Seek Admission at This Port in Six Months.

Four Persians, the first foreigners other than Mexicans to apply for admission to the United States at the local immigration office, during the past six months, were refused admittance at the Santa Fe street bridge Tuesday afternoon.

The men, all of them almost as dark as Moors, and all wearing heavy black mustaches, said that they wanted to come to El Paso to make their homes. They had come all the way from Afghanistan and had been in Mexico for some time. They came to Juarez over the Mexican Central road and immediately sought admittance.

Because they had no visible means of support they were denied the right to come into this country. One of them, taller than the others, spoke English quite well. He acted as spokesman for the others.

A Mexican family, desiring to go to California, was also denied admittance on Tuesday because the father was paralyzed.

Immigration has been light for the past six months, but now and then a few Mexican laborers come across prepared to go to Kansas or California to work. It is expected that once the Mexican Central railroad resumes operation, there will be a large influx of men to this country in search of employment on section gangs and in farm work.

MARRIED LIFE THE THIRD YEAR

The Dawsons Invite Them for Dinner, but Are Not at Home When They Come.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

"Oh, I'm so sorry, but we can't—we're dining out tonight."

"Isn't it too bad? I should love to go!" "I don't know," doubtfully, "hold the phone—I'll ask him."

Warren was putting his pearl studs in a dress shirt when Helen ran in excitedly.

"Oh dear, the Stevens have a box for the 'Lost Illusion' for tonight! They want us to come—even if we can't get there until late. Could we?" eagerly.

"Certainly not," frowning at a finger mark on his shirt front. "Nice time to invite us?"

"But the box was just given them this evening—they couldn't ask us sooner!"

"Well, if we dine with the Dawsons, we'll spend the evening there. Don't think I'm going to rush off right after dinner, do you?"

"No, I suppose not," murmured Helen reluctantly, as she went back to the phone to tell Mrs. Stevens they could not go.

A Business Friend.

But Mrs. Stevens insisted that she would leave a couple of seats at the box office in case they could come.

"Now hurry up there," called Warren, as Helen went back to her dressing room. "Dawson said 'I-we don't want to be late.'"

Mr. Dawson was a new business friend of Warren's and while Helen and Mrs. Dawson had exchanged calls, this was their first dinner.

"You're not going to wear a hat?" demanded Warren as a few moments later Helen came out drawing on her long gloves.

"No, yes, dear, it's only a dinner. We needn't go so formally, need we?"

"Well, this is one of the places we're going to right. Take off that hat. I've ordered a taxi."

A taxi! Oh, couldn't we have gone in the subway?

But Warren did not deign to answer this. Helen went back, took off her hat and threw a light scarf over her hair. She also changed her shoes for a pair of evening slippers, which she had thought too dressy for the subway. But since they were going in a cab she might as well wear them. It was evident Warren wanted her to look as well as she could.

A moment later the taxicab was announced.

"It's too bad that everything should come in one night," murmured Helen, as they drove off. "That was the play we were so anxious to see—the 'Lost Illusion'—and this is the last week."

"Well, it's a darn sight more important to dine with Dawson than go to any play. He's pulled off some mighty big deals lately, and if I can interest him in our company, it'll mean a whole lot. While I think of it, he's got a fine collection of old prints—that's his hobby. He'll probably show them, so Heaven's sake try to seem interested. Don't act like you did the other night when Wilson showed us those coins. By George you looked bored to death."

"Why, dear, I didn't!" indignantly. "Only I don't know anything about coins, and I thought it better to keep still than to make stupid comments."

"Don't know anything, either," admitted Warren, "but I failed it, and you can too, if you want to."

This did not add to Helen's prospect of a pleasant evening. It was hard enough for her to dine with comparative strangers, but to feel that she must try to talk and pretend a knowledge of something about which she knew nothing always terrified her.

The cab drew up before the imposing entrance of the "Kensington Arms." A uniformed hallman opened the door. "Mr. and Mrs. Curtis to see Mr.

Dawson." Warren announced briefly to the boy at the switchboard.

"They're not in," the boy informed them a moment later.

"Announce us to Mrs. Dawson, then," said Warren, curtly, and then the boy said, stolidly.

Another moment's wait and then the boy said, stolidly.

"Gone out?" murmured Helen, in amazement.

"Of course not," scoffed Warren. "That's a mistake. Now you get this thing right," he said to the boy.

"Announce Mr. and Mrs. Curtis to Mr. Dawson's apartment," he said, and then the boy said, stolidly.

"Gone out?" murmured Helen, in amazement.

"Of course not," scoffed Warren. "That's a mistake. Now you get this thing right," he said to the boy.

DOUGLAS FIGHTS TELEPHONE COMPANY

Effort to Stop Underground Conduct Laying. Kind Franchise Is Granted by City.

Tombstone, Ariz., Nov. 26.—City attorney John P. Ross appeared before Judge P. S. Sutter in the superior court and secured an order citing the Mountain States Telephone company to appear in court on Friday, the 22d of this month, to show cause why an injunction should not issue against their company, preventing them from further working on the underground system of telephones they are now installing in the city of Douglas.

The case is one in this respect—previous to the incorporation of the city of Douglas, the Douglas Improvement company was in operation in the then village of Douglas, and when Douglas was incorporated the Improvement company continued to operate the telephone system without any interference. About a year ago the Mountain States Telephone company bought out the Douglas Improvement company. A few weeks ago the Mountain States company began the work of rebuilding the Douglas system and at an expenditure of $20,000, is now "undergrounding" the system in the city. The city council claims that the telephone company has no franchise or rights at all and before proceeding further must get a franchise. The company has made no statement but it appears that even if the original company never had a permit or franchise, it obtained certain vested rights for it had been in the town for over nine years without any objection on the part of anyone.

MERCHANTS COMPLAIN ABOUT DUSTY STREETS.

Merchants are complaining because the downtown streets are not sprinkled and the big, street car sprinkler is rusting out on the Cotton avenue yards of the street railway company. One merchant said he had lost much valuable stock because of the damage the wind has done to the goods when drenched in the street. The city council last night the streets can be cleaned better when the sprinkler is not used, but as dusty five minutes after they are swept as before, and that the sprinkling service is necessary when the street doors are kept open.

A Remarkable Milk Record

Below is a facsimile of the official report on a sample of our CERTIFIED milk which we entered at the International Dairy Show, Milwaukee. This sample was 10 DAYS OLD when tested. It was produced October 15, taken from our stock Oct. 16th, put in a tub packed with ice and shipped by express that night. It arrived in Milwaukee Oct. 18th, was delivered Oct. 19th, and scored on the 25th, ten days old. Any other milk produced in El Paso would have been clabber before it reached Milwaukee, yet OURS scored PERFECT for ACIDITY.

The winner scored 98.6 and the second was 97.9, both much closer to Milwaukee than we are.
